Tarkett is committed to making the transition to the circular economy, inspired by Cradle to Cradle® principles. Since 2011, Tarkett, guided by this vision, has been deploying a comprehensive circular economy strategy based on its 'closed-loop circular design' model. This is driven by an extensive eco-innovation strategy, which positively contributes to people's health and well-being and the planet at every step of the product's life (design, production, use and recycling).

"Being shortlisted as one of the finalists gives recognition to all Tarkett employees and our partners who have put their collective energy and creativity into the pursuit of a purposeful circular economy business model that benefits to people, planet and profits," says Michel Giannuzzi, CEO of Tarkett. "And we can now see it driving innovation and developing our competitive edge, a truly encouraging sign that doing the right thing is also good for business."

Tarkett's circular vision has been at the forefront of setting new industry standards based on healthy materials supporting a positive closed-loop system, guided by the Cradle to Cradle® principles. In this regard, Tarkett has been a pioneer in developing a healthy alternative to the phthalate plasticizers in its vinyl flooring, supporting the responsible use of PVC. Leading the industry, it now uses phthalate-free plasticizers in all of its American and European vinyl production sites and has set a target to roll this new technology out to all of its vinyl production sites worldwide by 2020.

Tarkett has been chosen as finalist in this category among tier one multinational companies, such as Caterpillar, Philips, HP, Unilever and Veolia. The final winners of the Circulars will be announced at a ceremony at the World Economic Forum's Annual Meeting in Davos in January 2016.
