These days, there are more suitable surfaces for a residence with pets

If you are searching for the ideal flooring for your living spaces, remember that there is no longer a pressing need to let your furry friends unnecessarily, influence your buying decisions.

Some of the premium flooring materials available today are not what they were years ago. A new generation of advanced flooring with additional protections and safeguards are simplifying the process of managing problematic pet stains and easing pressures dealing with unpleasant pet odors.

Hardwood Flooring

Finished hardwood flooring with a protective coating minimizes damage stemming from the dirt pets drag into the home, spills and scratches. Without a protective layer of coating, the floor is vulnerable when pets are present.

Resilient Flooring

Resilient flooring, a category which includes vinyl flooring, is a comfortable surface for you and your pets. This type of flooring is affordably priced and easy on the budget. Some find other types of flooring to place a strain on the budget. For them, resilient flooring presents an affordable way to emulate the look of hardwood, ceramic, porcelain and stone at an affordable price. If your pets could talk, they would likely make a preference for resilient surfaces like vinyl known. Resilient flooring is moisture resistant, great news for pet owners. Most spills and accidents are easy to maintain.

Carpet

There are many consumers who remain unconvinced that carpet is a suitable surface covering for homeowners with pets. These consumers are unaware of the advancements and product improvements, which make carpet a viable alternative. This is not your parent's carpet. It is a durable material that is stain resistant and has a lower rate of moisture absorbtion.
